

"But after all," continues the Doctor, "there are some few things, which must still unavoidably remain in common: such (among others) are the elements of light, air and water."

Thank you for nothing, Doctor. It is very generous indeed, to allow us the common right to the elements of light, air and water, or even the blood which flows in our veins. Blackstone's Commentaries have been much celebrated; and this very chapter, so replete with malignant sophistry and absurdity, has been inserted in all the magazines, museums, registers, and other periodical publications in England, and cried up as the most ingenious performance ever published. . . . We will however never believe that men originally entered into a compact by which they excluded themselves from all right to the bounties of Providence, and if they did, the contract could not be binding on their posterity; for although a man may give away his own right, he cannot give away the right of another . . . The wants of man, instead of having been lessened, have been multiplied, and that in proportion to his boasted civilization; and the fear of poverty alone is more than sufficient to counterbalance all the fears to which he was subject, in the rudest stage of natural liberty. From this source arise almost all the disorders in the body politic. The fear of poverty has given a double spring to avarice, the deadliest passion in the human breast; it has erected a golden image, to which all mankind, with reverence, bend the knee, regardless of their idolatry. Merit is but an abortive useless gift to the possessor, unless accompanied with wealth; he might choose which tree whereon to hang himself, did not his virtuous mind tell him to "dig, beg, rot and perish, well content, so he but wrap himself in honest rags at his last gasp, and die in peace." It is a melancholy reflection that in almost all ages and countries, men have been cruelly butchered, for crimes occasioned by the laws; and which they never would have committed, had they not been deprived of their natural means of subsistence. But the governors of mankind seem never to have made any allowance for poverty; but like the stupid physician who prescribed bleeding for every disorder, they seem ever to have been distinguished by an insatiable thirst for human blood. The altars of a merciful God have been washed to their foundation from the veins of miserable men; and the double edged sword of Justice, with all its formality and parade, seems calculated to cut off equally the innocent and guilty. Between religion and law, man has had literally no rest for the sole of his foot. In the dark ages of Gothic barbarity, ignorance was some excuse for the framing of absurd systems; but in the age in which Dr. Blackstone lived, he should have known better, he should have known that the unequal distribution of property was the parent of almost all the disorders of government; nay, he did know it, for he had read Beccaria, who treating upon the crime of robbery, says,

"But this crime, alas! is commonly the effect of misery and despair, the crime of that unhappy part of mankind, to whom the right of exclusive property (a terrible and perhaps unnecessary right) has left but a bare subsistence."

American Journal of Economics and Sociology

ANOTHER publication is about to make its appearance in the rapidly expanding field of Georgeist literature. From the offices of the American Journal of Economics and Sociology we have received the following announcement:

"The Robert Schalkenbach Foundation announces the incorporation of the American Journal of Economics and Sociology. The Journal will be a quarterly publication devoted to scholarly papers dealing with the social sciences. The directors of the new corporation are Otto K. Dorn, Charles Johnson Post, Albert Pleydell, Harry Gunnison Brown, George Raymond Geiger, Frank Chodorov, and Will Lissner.

"The Journal has secured the cooperation of a group of distinguished specialists, who will act as an editorial advisory board and pass upon material intended for publication in the Journal. Will Lissner will be editor, and Frank Chodorov business manager; Miss V. G. Peterson of the Schalkenbach Foundation will act as secretary. The Journal's editorial office will be at 32 East 29th Street, New York City.

"All the collaborators in this enterprise will serve without compensation. A grant from the Schalkenbach Foundation provides for the expense of publication. The first issue of the Journal will appear in the autumn of 1941, and quarterly thereafter. The subscription price will be $3.00 per annum, $1.00 for a single issue.

"The Journal of Economics and Sociology will be an important innovation; it will be unique of its kind. For the first time in history there will be made available to students of economics papers by professors and economists of national and international reputation, who will discuss economic and social questions in the light of Georgeist theory. The Journal will not be edited for a popular readership, but rather for advanced students and scholars in philosophy, sociology, economics, and related fields.

"A publication of integrity, dignity, and genuine scholarship must eventually command the respect of the academic world, and immensely increase the prestige of the Georgeist movement. The directors are conscious of their responsibility, and fully determined to make the most of their unusual opportunity."
