

About the Authors

Ronald Banks is a property developer and foreign exchange broker and was for 15 years a lecturer at the School of Economic Studies, London.

Fred E. Foldvary, BA, is carrying out his post-graduate research in public finance at George Mason University, Fairfax, Virginia.

Alexandra Rose Hardie, Ph.D., is a lecturer in economics at the University of Exeter.

Fred Harrison, M.Sc., is Director of the Centre for Incentive Taxation and author of The Power in the Land (1983).

Gregers Mørch-Lassen, MA, is engaged in the planning of the computer systems used for property valuation by Denmark's Inland Revenue Directorate.

John Loveless, M.Sc., is a lecturer in civil engineering at the University of Bristol who has written about urban wasteland for the Adam Smith Institute.

Anders Müller, MA, is the author of technical papers on computer-assisted land valuation presented at conferences of the International Real Estate Federation and the International Association of Assessing Officers.

Duncan W. Pickard, Ph.D., farms 70 acres in West Yorkshire and is lecturer in animal nutrition at the University of Leeds.

David Richards, MA, is Senior Researcher with the Economic and Social Science Research Association.

Francis M. Smith, Ph.D., formerly the Technical Director of a multinational chemical company, is a business consultant.