

Republican, an appointee of the West Park Board, was elected president; Alderman Milton J. Foreman, Republican, an appointee of the City Council, was elected vice-president; and M. L. McKinley, Democrat, an appointee of the legislature, was elected secretary. There were no contests for these offices. After several propositions for organizing for work had been considered, the following by Joseph O'Donnell, Democrat (an appointee of Mayor Dunne), was adopted:

Resolved, That the chairman appoint a committee of eleven, of which he shall be a member ex-officio, to draft rules of procedure to govern the convention, together with the number and the names of the committees, and recommendations on such other subjects as may come before the deliberations of the convention.

The convention then adjourned to December 19th at 2 o'clock.

Mayor Tom L. Johnson in New York and Chicago.

After his speech at the City Club in New York (p. 579), which attracted marked attention there, Mayor Johnson of Cleveland was invited to speak before the City Club of Chicago, which he did on the 9th. The meeting was the largest and the audience the most notable in the history of the club, and general satisfaction was expressed with Mayor Johnson's manner of treating his subject. He spoke on municipal home rule primarily, and incidentally on municipal ownership and operation of municipal utilities, and he was kept upon the floor by questioners for three hours. As the speech was extemporaneous and the local newspapers reported only sensational and comparatively trifling incidents, it is impossible to record what Mayor Johnson said. Incidentally, however, he is reported to have explained the misapprehension under which Mr. Dalrymple, the manager of the Glasgow traction system (pp. 186, 537), was brought to this country by Mayor Dunne, by saying:

You people here have heard a great deal about Mr. Dalrymple. I want to say I was responsible for bringing him here. Mayor Dunne asked me whom I considered an expert. I immediately thought of Glasgow and the man named Young, who had built up those lines. But I wasn't sure of his name, so I told Mayor Dunne to ask for the general manager of the lines. I didn't know Young had gone to London. So Dalrymple came over. But the man who was wanted was Young.

In his speech Mayor Johnson advocated municipal ownership and operation, the initiative, the referendum and the recall, and complete municipal home rule. When an auditor, Alexander H. Revell, objected to municipal ownership and operation that it would give the employes great political power, Mayor Johnson replied that this would be a trifle in comparison with the political power of the owners of great privileges. In the same connection Mayor Dunne said:

It is easier to get a man a place with the traction or gas companies here than it is to have him appointed on the police force or fire department. I would like to know how it is in Cleveland.

"I believe that is true in every large city. I know it is in Cleveland," was Mayor Johnson's reply. By way of illustration a member of the club, Mr. Andrew Adair, interjected:

I was told by a member of the local transportation committee a few days ago, that he had got jobs for eighteen of his constituents with the Union Traction company.

Second-choice voting in Wisconsin.

In accordance with Gov. La Follette's recommendation in his message (p. 577) a bill amending the primary election law so as to allow voting for first and second choice was agreed to by the committee on privileges and elections of the lower House. Under this bill there were to be as many tickets as parties and one for nonpartisans. The names of all candidates were to be arranged alphabetically on their respective ballots. At the right of each name was to be a blank, and in these the voter was to mark his first and his second choice. The bill came before the House on the 12th, and after a hot debate was defeated—43 to 42. An attempt to clinch this result, by tabling a motion to reconsider, failed.

The Life insurance grafters.

At the session of the legislative investigation committee (p. 543) at New York on the 12th, John F. Dryden, president of the Prudential and a Senator of the United States from New Jersey, made the following resolutions:

That contributions aggregating $26,000 were made by the Prudential to the Republican national committee in 1896, 1900 and 1904; that the "legislative" expenses of the Prudential in 1899 were $15,800, of which sum $5,000 was paid to Andrew Hamilton, the manager of the "yellow dog" fund of the "big three," in connection with some legislation "of the usual kind" in Illinois; that the Prudential has paid to the Metropolitan Life Insurance company since 1896 the sum of $24,540 as its share of "legislative" expenses; that $22,000 was spent in Wisconsin this year to defeat efforts of the State insurance commissioner to exclude the Prudential from the State, and the company won; that in 1904 Thomas N. McCarter, then attorney general of the State of New Jersey, now a director of the Prudential, was paid $27,500 by the insurance company for "legal services;" that Director McCarter of the Prudential is president of the Public Service Corporation, which owns the trolley roads and electric light plants in many New Jersey cities, and several other directors of the Prudential are also directors of the Public Service Corporation, while the Prudential holds $6,330,000 of bonds of subsidiary companies of the Public Service Corporation, and has made many loans to that corporation; that in the reorganization of the Prudential under New Jersey laws several years ago the right of policyholders to vote, which was granted in the original charter, was revoked.

A conference on Immigration.

At the conference on immigration of the National Civic Federation at New York on the 8th, a temporary organization of the National Institute of Immigration was effected with the following officers:

President, Broughton Brandenburg, New York; vice president, Jesse Taylor, Ohio; second vice president, H. W. Fairbanks, Texas; secretary-treasurer, Arthur Kellogg.

During the sessions of the conference the two following resolutions on Chinese exclusion were adopted:

Resolved, That we heartily indorse the position taken by the president that the Chinese exclusion laws forbidding the admission of laborers ought to be maintained and rigidly and honestly enforced.

Resolved, That our laws and treaties should be so framed and administered as carefully to except Chinese students, business men and professional men of all kinds, not only merchants, but bankers, doctors, manufacturers, professors and travelers from the enforcement of the exclusion law.

One of the speakers at this conference was Ng Poon Chew, managing editor of the Chinese daily of San Francisco. Mr. Chew, a relative of Mr. Wu, formerly Chinese minister to the United States but now in the home service, came to this country at the age of 14, and was educated here both in English and Chinese. In his speech, which has attracted much attention, Mr. Chew said, among other things:

According to the ideas of the civilization of this twentieth century a nation has no right except what she can enforce by might. Therefore, according to this idea, we of the Chinese nation have no right to enter until we have the might to demand equal treatment with other countries. China is preparing now to be able some of these days to be a great nation, so as to kill the largest number of men in a given time with the least expense to herself, and then and not till then will she be looked upon as a great nation. The man who kills a thousand men is almost worshiped as a hero, while the poor devil who kills but one man is executed as a murderer. There is no ground to sustain the objections raised to the Chinese. Of course we have Chinese people of bad character, we have gamblers and we have opium-smokers. If I were a woman and my husband insisted on taking something I would rather he took opium every time than whisky. Whisky raises the passions which transform a man into a brute; opium transforms him into a living corpse. The American filled with whisky comes home and kicks his wife. The Chinaman under the influence of opium goes home and his wife kicks him. You Americans are all angels and we Chinamen are only half angels and half devils, a combination which you call human. The most striking objection to the Chinese is that we do not assimilate. Assimilate, humbug! You do not give us the chance. You throw every conceivable obstacle in our way. On the Pacific coast you forbid us to intermarry and at the same time you condemn us for not helping to solve the race suicide problem. You claim that we send money out of the country to China. This is not so. We send goods. Every American dollar is worth a dollar in the United States, while it is worth but 47 cents in China. Therefore we send goods. I have been here twenty-five years. All my interests are here, all my property; I pay taxes. I have raised a family of five children, and yet should I leave the country I would never be able to return to this land of liberty and human progress. Four years ago I went to Niagara and wanted to pass over the suspension bridge and look at those magnificent Falls from the Canadian side. I was accompanied by an official of the government, who when we reached the middle of the bridge drew a line and said to me, "If you cross this line you shall be a Canadian whether you want to or not." I said, "No, I had rather be a Chinaman even in the United States." I edit a paper turned out by yellow men, but we yellow men turn out a white paper and many white men turn out a yellow paper. It is almost as impossible for a Chinaman to enter the United States as it is for a rich, fat American millionaire with all his money on his back to climb to heaven through a fire escape. I have in my pocket a letter from a friend of mine, a graduate of Yale university, who after teaching in Singapore for three years desired to return to the United States and was detained for one month in the detention sheds and then deported. We want better men at the head of the inspectors, not those pig-headed, oyster-brained officers which you now have. These officials who deported this educated Chinaman could none of them have written such a letter—such fluent diction, such perfect rhetoric, such command of the English. It is most unwise that you should by this unjust discrimination create the antagonism of a country naturally friendly. Human and awakened China will soon become powerful and mighty and will demand ten or fifteen years hence the same treatment that is accorded other nations.

The Russian revolution.

News of the situation in Russia (p. 580) is feverish, but trustworthy details are almost wholly lacking. Mutinies among the troops are vaguely reported from many quarters. On the 10th at St. Petersburg, Mr. Krustaleff, the president of the executive committee of the workingmen's council, was summarily arrested by Cossack troops. Seven other members of the committee were arrested with him. In consequence indignant meetings of workingmen were held in St. Petersburg immediately, at which inflammatory speeches were made. The telegraphers' tie-up is reported to be still complete. The Union of Unions decided on the 13th at St. Petersburg by a ballot representing 70 per cent of the membership, to give moral, financial and all other possible support to the revolutionary programme of the Workingmen's Alliance.

On the 13th it was rumored at St. Petersburg that a revolutionary government for Livonia had been set up and in order to prevent troops from interfering all railway communication had been stopped. Confirmation of this rumor is reported by way of Helsingfors and Berlin. Two messengers, reported to have walked 30 miles from Riga to a railway train, assert that a provisional government has been set up in Livonia and that many of the troops have gone over to the insurrectionists. Dvina fort, commanding Riga harbor, is in their possession and the governor and other Russian officials are prisoners say these messengers, who add that—the provisional government exercises authority throughout Livonia and part of Corland. The new government has declared the separation of the Lithuanian people from the Russian Empire. New local officials have been chosen, who have decreed the closing of the spirit-shops and breweries and the annulment of contracts between the peasants and the land owners. There is a general uprising of the native peasants, who are traveling in armed bands, attacking the estates and driving off or killing their owners. Some of the land owners have organized volunteer battalions to protect their property, as the authorities are powerless to afford aid, but the majority are fleeing in terror. The peasants forbid the owners to sell grain or lumber, and formally declare that the forests and estates of those who have departed will be confiscated.

The position of the peasants in these provinces is said to have been the most deplorable of any in the entire Empire, conditions almost approaching those of the feudal system having been continued down to the present time. It seems that the peasants have been virtually at the mercy of the German barons from whom they rent land and purchase the right to cut wood and to fish in the waters of the gulf.
