

Coming eastward from our restless "new possessions" in the orient, we are met with news of the first American election in the new territory of Hawaii. Reports of the result reached San Francisco on the 16th. There were three parties in the field—the republican, the democratic and the independent. The former two are branches of the republican and the democratic parties, respectively, of the United States; the third is the native anti-white party. Each party voted for a delegate to congress, and for a full territorial legislative ticket. The campaign was intensely exciting and bitter. There were registered in the island of Hawaii 2,717 voters; in Maui, 2,058; in Oahua, 5,704, and in Kauai, 739—a total of 11,218, which is 3,000 less than the last registration under the monarchy. The full vote is yet to be reported, but the news reaching San Francisco on the 16th, seven days from Honolulu, is sufficiently full to indicate results. Robert W. Wilcox, the independent candidate for territorial delegate to congress, has been elected over Prince David (Kawananakoa) the democratic candidate, and Samuel Parker, the republican. Wilcox, who is 45 years old, is the son of an American sea captain and a native woman. He had a boarding school education in Maui, supplemented with study in an Italian military school, and at the age of 25 was a member of the Maui legislature. In the stirring events connected with the overthrow of the native monarchy and the subsequent revolt against the foreign regime, he took an active, prominent and dangerous part in behalf of the monarchy. Mr. Wilcox was originally married in Italy to a daughter of the Italian Baron Lorenzo Sobrero, from whom he has been separated since 1898. Having been notified by the Italian consul at Honolulu in 1896 that a decree of divorce for which he had applied in Italy was granted, he married a descendant of the father of King Kamehameha the Great. His election was opposed on the ground that no decree of divorce had in fact been granted, and it is now declared by his enemies that an attempt to unseat him upon charges of bigamy will be made at Washington. Besides electing Wilcox, the independent or native party have secured a majority of one in the territorial senate, and of five in the territorial house.

Reports from the Puerto Rican elections, received since those given on page 487, show that the total vote was, in round numbers, only 58,000, and that nearly all of them were cast by the republican party, which is the old party of independence. The federal party leaders advised their followers not to vote, and only 150 disregarded the advice. The reason given for this refusal to participate in the election was that the federals had not been offered a chance to register, that districts had been gerrymandered, and that discriminations had been made against them in the appointment of election judges. In consequence of this election all the 35 members of the house of delegates in Puerto Rico—the only popular body under the act of congress, and a body which can enact no legislation without the consent of the governor and council, appointed by the American president—will be republicans. The commissioner to congress is Frederico Degetan, an author, scientist and lawyer, who has been prominent for nearly 20 years in agitations for Puerto Rican independence.

The Cubans have now received the most direct assurance of independence that has yet come to them. The American secretary of War, Mr. Root, who has for several days been in Cuba, ostensibly upon a pleasure trip, declared on the 20th that he was there officially, and guaranteed a complete fulfillment of the American pledges. The occasion was a luncheon on board the steamer Reina de Los Angeles, in Santiago harbor. Root was a guest of Menendez & Co., on board the steamer, and in response to a luncheon toast he said:

I am visiting Cuba as the representative of President McKinley to investigate as to the inhabitants' ability to govern themselves. I had come to imagine that the Cubans were only partly civilized. I am agreeably surprised to find an enlightened people. I desire to renew assurances of the good faith of the United States government, which will fulfill its promises, and I expect soon to see a free, self-governing republic in Cuba.

Mr. Root's acknowledgment that although upon investigation he finds the Cubans to be an enlightened people, he, the American secretary of war, had previously imagined them to be "only partly civilized," raises a serious question as to the value of the information with which the war department is supplied regarding the peoples it has been called upon temporarily to govern.

In the United States proper another stunning exemplification of the theory that our civilization is only skin deep has been furnished in Colorado. A 16-year-old negro, Preston Porter, Jr., accused of having assaulted and murdered a white girl of 11, was lynched and burned to death, without any attempt on the part of public officials to interfere. The boy's crime had been committed at Limon, Lincoln county. He was arrested in Denver and there lodged in jail. During the night of the 16th the sheriff took him in a closed carriage to Magnolia, a railroad station east of Denver, where he delivered him to the sheriff of Lincoln county, who carried him to Limon. It was known all the time that at Limon the boy would be lynched; and, besides a crowd of reporters on their way to see the lynching, the father of the murdered girl was on the train with the sheriff and his prisoner. When the train arrived at Limon a committee from the lynchers came on board demanding the negro boy, and one of them threw a hangman's noose over his neck. The sheriff, who had apparently got possession of the prisoner for the purpose of delivering him to the mob, made no objection to the lawless proceedings and at a station three miles east of Limon the lynching party took their victim from the train. It was at first intended to hang him, but the father of the murdered girl protested against this, and at his suggestion burning at the stake was chosen instead. Preparations were accordingly made, and early in the evening of the 16th, the boy having meantime been chained to a railroad rail set firmly in the ground and surrounded with oil-saturated wood, a mob of 300 people or more lending encouragement, the girl's father kindled the fire. From this time on until unconsciousness had relieved him from pain, the negro boy's struggles and screams and appeals were indescribably terrible. Finally, as his body fell forward, boards were piled upon it by the mob, and what with the shock of the torture and suffocation from the smoke his voice was stilled and his body at length reduced to ashes. A local coroner's jury, committing deliberate perjury, returned a verdict that "death was at the hands of parties unknown."
